CASE STUDY:

Manufacturing Facility Restores Tanks With Protective Coating

Not Your Average Painting Project

The storage tanks at a manufacturing plant were looking worse for wear. Not only was the faded paint unattractive for visitors, but it left the tanks vulnerable to the elements, putting a huge investment at risk. The facility chose A&K Painting due to our industrial coating expertise. However, this was far from a standard paint job: the tanks were especially tall and their proximity to surrounding structures made it more challenging than most projects.

A Unique Approach

We installed specialized scaffolding in just one week to give our crew 360-degree access to every tower. This would allow quick and safe navigation of the project area as well as full-coverage coating. From there, we applied an epoxy primer and urethane top coat for maximum corrosion resistance and UV protection. Plus, our JobNet project management platform kept the client informed every step of the way.

Stylish Protection

The project was completed in just over one month—not bad for such a detailed process. Thanks to our flexible work, the facility experienced zero downtime or added safety risk. Now, their tanks will hold up to harsh weather long into the future. On top of that, the smooth white coating brings a polished look to the plant that clients and partners can appreciate. A well-maintained facility was a high priority for this client, and A&K Painting delivered.
